I have the following code: $('form').valid(); //when form is valid i dont want to display the error message if($('form').valid()){ } However when I submit the form (due to the error) the validation works fine, I just need to display the error message. How do I get it to display when the form validates? Thanks A: Depending on what you're using to validate you could do something like $('form').validate(); if (form.valid()){ ... } else{ $("#errorMessage").show(); } If you're using something like Jquery, you could just add the errorMessage to the element that is being validated, and remove it when it passes. If you're using Rails or some other framework, you should look into their built in validation. There's a good example here. Pathway analysis of a cancer-associated gene set in breast and ovarian cancer identifies two closely related pathways. In order to identify key pathways involved in breast and ovarian cancers, we used cDNA microarrays to analyze the expression of 1,
